WESTWOOD ENERGY ENGINEERING MANAGER NAMED

April 15, 2011

Westwood Professional Services, Inc. announced this week that senior project manager, Chris Carda, PE, has been promoted to Energy Engineering Manager. Carda will assume the lead role in managing the energy engineering team, which will support both wind and solar development projects. He will oversee the team's workload and performance, pursue engineering specific business development opportunities, and lead the development of innovative engineering products and techniques.

This position was previously held by Steve Windingland, who was recently promoted to the position of Director of Wind Energy. Carda's transition to this position from a senior project management role stems from his great success in managing complex projects and multiple design teams. Carda and Windingland will work closely during this transition to maintain the group's high level of performance.
